New Trends in Allergy V: v. 5

Allergy is one of the major health problems of most modern societies. Allergic diseases have increased in prevalence during the last decades; the reasons for this increase are unknown, there are only hypothetical concepts for explanation. The series New Trends in Allergy now covers five volumes originating from special international symposia, started in 1980 and held every 5 years, which highlight specific areas of progress in allergy research and practice. The idea behind the 5-year interval between these symposia is that real new developments do not occur very often and certainly not every year. The contents of this book focus on specific areas where progress in allergy research has shown fascinating developments, such as: – Elucidation of the complex genetic basis of atopy – The influence of environmental pollutants as well as natural biological environmental factors on allergy – Gene-environment interactions in the development of allergy – Psycho-neuro-immunological aspects of allergic sensitisation and disease – The nature and function of dendritic cells in skin and mucous membranes – Interactions between lymphocytes and effector cells, such as mast cells, eosinophils and neutrophils – Allergen carriers, allergen release and bioavailability, allergen structure – Atopic eczema – Asthma and rhinoconjunctivitis – Food allergy and anaphylaxis – Pharmacotherapy – Unspecific (e. g.
